Subject: redhat's proposed solution is excellent

It is completely inappropriate at this juncture to "remedy" MicroSoft's monopoly by subjecting mass populations of children to their software, thereby completely counteracting any supposed "remedy". This farcical "remedy" is akin to tobacco companies offering free low-tar cigarettes to juveniles as an "apology" to lung cancer victims. RedHat's (<http://www.redhat.com>) proposed solution of exchanging MicroSoft software for significantly less expensive open-source software and leveraging the cost savings to provide substantially higher quantities of computers to less privileged school districts is a noble one. I will be severely disappointed by the leadership of our U.S. Justice System if this course of action is not pursued.

thank you for your time,
